We take a look at the killer opening lines that got us hooked into our favourite books. The art of making an entrance isn't an easy one. Many authors have failed at the first hurdle – the first page – which is what makes the books below that little bit special. Truman Capote once said, "to me, the greatest pleasure of writing is not what it's about, but the inner music that words make." A truly great novel grabs you by the jugular with its first sentence, those words – its music – and never lets you go. Which is why we're here right now: to celebrate these words. The best opening lines in lit...
