America lost the Vietnam War because of the premature withdrawal of U.S. peacekeepers for political reasons and against military advice. The Vietnam War was conducted during a period of the most significant social upheaval in American history, which resulted in the war being heavily politicized. View source. In contrast, the North Vietnamese never wavered. They ignored every one of Johnson's many offers to negotiate a settlement. By 1971, the war was at a stalemate, neither side able to establish a clear advantage. The president, Richard Nixon, pursued a two-prong strategy to turn over combat operations to the South Vietnamese, and to bomb North Vietnam. The effort brought the communists to the Paris Peace Talks.
