This monograph describes some of the research that has been conducted on the military CS system, focusing on improvements in prediction capabilities, responsiveness of supply chains, and a governing command and control system. Progress has been made in all three areas, and these results have improved Air Force ability to respond to the unique challenges of national defense in the new century. As the United States and the Department of Defense transition current forces to a fighting force tailored to the new challenges of the 21st century, responsiveness and flexibility have become fundamental qualities in operational and support forces. Integrating Prediction, Responsiveness, and Control Capabilities. by Robert S. Tripp, Mahyar A. Amouzegar, Ronald G. McGarvey, Rick Bereit, David W. George, Joan Cornuet. The monograph points out the need for both predictive tools and responsive systems working together. A key enabler of sense and response combat support is combat support command and control, which involves joint development of a plan in which logistics process performance and resource levels are related to desired operational effects; establishment of logistics process performance and resource-level control parameters; execution of the plan and tracking of control parameters against actual process performance and resource levels; signaling. DevExpress WPF controls (e.g., DXGrid, DXPivotGrid, DXDocking, DXBars and DXLayoutControl) allow you to save layout information to an XML file or a stream. Once saved, the control's layout can be restored when required. Layout information may include the visibility, position and size of visual elements in a control, their appearance settings, filter, sorting, grouping and summary information, etc. Individual controls provide options allowing you to control which settings should be saved. To learn more, see the Layout Options topic. You can save and restore the layout of controls using one
