BEECHED treasure in Lafayette Park.Bricks of Lafayette Park were taken shock when an Englishman named Ben Glover pried the stone wall of the park’s entrance, he just as a complete sensation of the park was getting underway. “This is slightly off the wall,” he said. “For some time I’ve wanted to check out Lafayette Park, which has been a bit of a mystery to me.”

Glover suggested the stories of the park’s history: “The first time I’ve heard about Lafayette Park is that it was once a famous hotel named The American Hotel. It was demolished in 1932, long before the construction of the park.”

The hotel is said to have been owned at various times by a group of influential San Franciscans, including former mayor and state senator Alphonso B. Maguire, who was known for his love of art and architecture. The hotel is said to have been the site of many famous events, including a meeting of the San Francisco Committee of 1876, which was formed to call attention to the need for a new city hall.

In recent years, the Lafayette Park neighborhood has been the site of many events, including a large-scale street festival, a harbor festival, and a concert. The city has also proposed plans to build a new park in the area, which would include a playground, a dog park, and a children’s garden. The plans have been met with mixed reactions from the community, with some residents concerned about the impact on the existing park.

The park is located on the edge of the Mission District, and is bordered by the Sunset District, the Richmond District, and the Inner Sunset District. It is 0.5 miles (0.8 km) in length and 0.25 miles (0.4 km) in width. The park is open daily from 7 am to 10 pm.
